Engineering Building, Leicester University

5, view from the tenth floor of the glazed bridge on the eleventh floor looking to the lift motor room. 6, the second-floor landing with the doors of the large lecture-theatre on the right. Floors and walls are finished with Dutch terrazzo tiles. 7, glazed link between the two towers. 8, the main entrance to the laboratories and offices on the ground floor with the workshop block on the right. 9, general view from the north-east.

10, looking up the south-west side of the administration block, 11, the staircase and lift towers between the administration and laboratory blocks, seen from the north-east. The glazed exhaust link turns off towards the top where fewer people can see the connection on the facing page. 12, view from the south, with the elevation and laboratory tower rising above the workshop block. The projecting sections of the laboratory have large glazed shapes to give good views of the laboratory in the front of the experiment watching.